

Abstract

The present invention relates to a method and a device for screening with cells immobilized on electrodes by using a low-salt medium. In particular, a method is disclosed for determining whether a substance is a modulator of a target component in a cell immobilized on an electrode.